

Gypsies of God

Frank was born in Hackensack, New Jersey, on August 18, 1941 at the center of a megalopolis and a war baby to boot. From his first memory he was drawn like a magnet to the outdoors and decided early on somehow he would build his life centered around the wilderness of our country, even if that would fly in the face of this modern world. He set to work on farms, sawmills, and logging then headed to Montana on his old Harley FL to work in the deep copper mines at Butte. Still restless he searched for a wilder place and in the spring of 65 headed north to Alaska and finally found what he was looking for. A land still open, wild and free. Since that time he has trapped, guided, and prospected all over the frozen north, from the southeast to the Brooks Range, and everywhere in between, all the time with his wife and partner of forty years raising their four boys with correspondence courses for their school work. Today, Frank, with Carol and two dogs, lives in a small log cabin along a remote river accessible only by boat and plane. He still lives a subsistence lifestyle and will until his last day.
