Not illustrated. 1891 Excerpt: ...aside, And doffd his helm: and then there flutterd in, Half-bold, half-frighted, with dilated eyes, A tribe of women, dressd in many hues, And mingled with the spearmen: and Earl Doorm Struck with a knives haft hard against the board, And calld for flesh and wine to feed his spears. And men brought in whole hogs and quarter beeves, And all the hall was dim with steam of flesh: And none spake word, but all sat down at once, And ate with tumult in the naked hall, Feeding like horses when you hear them feed; Till Enid shrank far back into herself, To shun the wild ways of the lawless tribe. But when Earl Doorm had eaten all he would, He rolld his eyes about the hall, and found A damsel drooping in a corner of it. Then he rememberd her, and how she wept; And out of her there came a power upon him; And rising on the sudden he said, Eat! I never yet beheld a thing so pale. Gods curse, it makes me mad to see you weep. Eat! Look yourself. Good luck had your good man, For were I dead who is it would weep for me? Sweet lady, never since I first drew breath Have I beheld a lily like yourself. And so there lived some color in your cheek, There is not one among my gentlewomen Were fit to wear your slipper for a glove. But listen to me, and by me be ruled, And I will do the thing I have not done, For ye shall share my earldom with me, girl, And we will live like two birds in one nest, And I will fetch you forage from all fields, For I compel all creaures to my will. He spoke: the brawny spearman let his cheek Bulge with the unswallowd piece, and turning stared; While some, whose souls the old serpent long had drawn Down, as the worm draws in the witherd leaf And makes it earth, hissd each at
